HOUSEFURNISHINGS

One of the supporting features of this department is the care given to details. It takes our buyer longer to buy his stock than it does to sell it. His version is a good one. All goods well bought are half sold. Price-lowness, for which he is always watchful, puts the article so much nearer your ownership. There's ever so much to be bought now dovetailing with the household wants. Better go through the list and mark off your items.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

A Statement by Baron Hermann as to the New German Law.

The Products of All Nations to Be Treated Alike for the Protection of Consumers—Why Some Canned Goods Are Excluded—Rigid Supervision to Be Required in Future.

Copies of the Meat Inspection bill recently passed by the Reichstag have been received by Baron Hermann, the Agricultural Expert of the German Embassy, and by him submitted to the United States authorities. Baron Hermann has issued the following statement on the subject:

"Owing to the historical development of the German Empire, each one of the confederate states and a great many of the larger cities had various special laws regulating meat inspection, which were carried out in different ways, according to the importance which authorities attached to the protection of public health.

"These many different laws and regulations became more and more an impediment to trade, and to do away with much disagreeable friction in inter-state and foreign commerce the confederate states resolved to abolish all these local laws and restrictions and to create one law and a uniform system for the whole Empire.

"The new law will require two separate inspections in the German Empire. First, an inspection of the live stock before the slaughter, then an inspection of the slaughtered meat, thus giving guarantee that no meat or meat products coming from diseased or unwholesome animals will go to the consumer either in the larger cities or small villages of the German Empire. This has been urgently required for a long time by all the boards of health as an essential necessary measure for the protection of public health in a country thickly populated and partly overcrowded, as Germany is today.

"If all the animals slaughtered in Germany have to pass through the double examination which I have mentioned, it is evident that the meat products of other countries, when found wholesome at the port of entry, after having passed the same inspection to which all home industries must be subjected, will enter into the channels of trade without any further embargo and without finding another inspection law and different regulations at the doors of every single state or township, as it has been the case heretofore.

In bringing about this uniform system, Baron Hermann says, the framers of the measure were confronted with the difficulty of inspecting certain classes of goods, such as canned goods, as the opening of the can would practically destroy the contents. It also was felt to be impracticable to inspect small bits of pickled meat, and it was decided to exclude a few of these products.

Baron Hermann estimates them at 6 or 7 per cent of the total meat exports from the United States to Germany and 11-12 to 15, all-wool novelty chevrons. AN EXTRA PAIR OF PANTS WITH EACH SUIT. Pants have double seats, seams all stayed with linen tape, $5 value, Saturday, $2.98

All the choice lots in Double Breasted Suits, 7 to 16 years, in fancy striped worsteds and choice cassimeres. VESTES of similar materials, 3 to 9 years, made in the very best manner, silk stitched, best linings. Sold for $4, $4.50, and $5, Saturday, $2.98

2 per cent of the entire trade from this country to Germany. He calls attention to the fact that the bill does not apply to German colonies, which take a considerable part of the American export of canned goods. He believes the chief meat exports of the United States will be facilitated by the uniform inspection and the trade increased.

When Baron Hermann was asked if the measure was to be considered as one of protection to German goods against competing foreign goods, similar to the American tariff laws, he said the tariff idea did not enter into the calculation.

BRISTOW AND HIS AX.

Reductions of Salaries and Expenses by Wholesale in Havana.

Some of the employees of the Postal Department in Cuba, it is said, are not sorry that Fourth Assistant Postmaster General is about to return to the United States. They say that he has used the department "ax" which is called into requisition when official decapitation is the order, or when salaries are to be reduced, with a disheartening vigor.

The changes made by Mr. Bristow since he reached Havana are as follows:

The law office contained a solicitor of posts at $2,500 per annum, and an assistant at $2,000. Now there is only a law clerk, and he is paid $2,000.

A bureau of stamps, which costs in salaries $11,500, will go out of business at the end of the fiscal year, a bureau of stamps and supplies, costing $4,900 in salaries, taking its place.

The money order and registry bureaus have been consolidated at a saving of $5,050 yearly.

Before Bristow arrived there were eleven official messengers, aggregating a payroll of $5,600. Now there are only five, who draw $16,000.

In the bureau of transportation and translation the payroll has been pared by $4,000.

The chief clerk of the department of posts, to whom Rathbone gave $4,000 a year, will hereafter get only $2,500.

The postmaster of Havana, who has been drawing $4,500, comes down to the same salary paid in this country to postmasters of cities doing $200,000 worth of business, namely $3,600.

Eleven other officers of more or less consequence have had their salaries scaled from $100 to $400 a year each.

Seven ordinary clerkships, aggregating a payroll of $4,500, have been abolished and an average cut of $250 each has been made in the pay of twelve other employees.
